COACH AND BUS

The PSV Industry's News Weekly

WEEK

Welcome to Coach and Bus Week: the first weekly news magazine dedicated to the entire PSV industry. It's your industry and we will aim to bring the news to you as it happens. We will also look behind the stories of the week to keep you right up to date with this ever changing market.

Before 1986 there was a clear distinction between bus and coach operations and the people who ran them. But deregulation blurred the lines. More coach operators moved into local bus operations, tendered and commercial. Bus operators have increasingly looked to expand the scope and size of their product range - primarily through acquisition.

Coach and Bus Week brings together the unrivalled coverage of both Bus Business and Coachmart, magazines that have built reputations on accurate, unbiased reporting of news and features behind the news.

Inevitably this has meant the information needs of both coach and bus operators have changed in line with the market itself. And, with the imminent dismantling of trade barriers within Europe, they look set to change still further. Coach and Bus Week has been launched to meet the information needs of coach and bus operators today and tomorrow.

Coach and Bus Week brings together the unrivalled coverage of both Bus Business and Coachmart, magazines that have built reputations on accurate, unbiased reporting of news and features behind the news.

But Coach and Bus Week will go further - the industry's leading writers will complement our specific coach and bus news stories with pan-PSV analysis and comment. We will attempt to draw conclusions about some of the major issues facing today's operators.

And we will have a strong voice, both within our industry and probably more importantly to the relevant bodies that influence the future of this industry. You can rely on us to campaign for your interests.

In short Coach and Bus Week will give you more, it will give it to you better, and you'll get it every week.

COACH AND BUS WEEK ENDING 22 FEBRUARY 1992

■ The dust settled this week on the flurry of deals which marked the end of National Welsh. Julian Peddle's Rhondda Bus consortium now owns Porth depot, having sold on Aberdare and Merthyr to Cynon Valley Transport. Rhondda Bus also bought Caerphilly depot from KPMG Peat Marwick. No buyer was found for Bridgend depot and it has been shut. Negotiations over the future of Barry are still continuing.

■ Cambus has taken over its biggest competitor in the Cambridge area. Millers Coaches of Foxton ran 39 vehicles and employed 60 people on tours and tendered and commercial bus services.

■ Public transport minister, Roger Freeman, seems to be back peddling on London deregulation. He told a recent meeting of London borough councillors: "If I can be convinced we are taking a step backwards rather than forwards with deregulation, then I will think again."

■ After much delay and speculation, Plaxton has finally relaunched the stylish 425 integral it bought from Duple three years ago. It will be built in France by Plaxton's Lorraine subsidiary, but will still be Cummins powered.

■ Proudmutual, owner of competitor Kentish Bus, has bought out the London Transport services of troubled Maidstone Boro'line. Price paid was £300,000. The remainder of the municipal-owned company was still in doubt when Coach & Bus Week went to press.

Freeman offers rethink on London deregulation

With a general election likely in only seven weeks, public transport minister, Roger Freeman, has taken another step back from a total commitment to deregulation of London's buses.

Last week he admitted to a meeting of London borough councillors that the Government could still be made to rethink its deregulation policy, only a fortnight after saying special rules may be needed to govern bus operation in a deregulated London.

Freeman told the bus priority seminar: "Many people are concerned about traffic congestion and the effect of deregulation. There will be no deregulation until 1994 and no privatisation until 1995. We hope deregulation will mean more buses and bus passengers and fewer people travelling by Underground or car."

"But if I can be convinced we are taking a step backwards rather than forwards with deregulation, then I will think again."

His comments were tempered by the reaction of a senior London Buses manager, who said: "You must remember that he's a politician and to a certain extent his comments are coloured by his audience. We are still convinced that deregulation will go ahead as promised if the Conservatives win the election."

However, Freeman's apparent indecision over deregulation is likely to be capitalised upon by shadow transport secretary, John Prescott, who has been trying to allay the fears of municipal managers towards Labour's planned franchise network.

Freeman: "There will be no deregulation until 1994 and no privatisation until 1995."

He told a delegation from the Association of Local Bus Managers, led by Bournemouth Transport md, Ted Reid, that a future Labour government would not obstruct privatisation of municipal companies, offering the reassurance that municipal employees could remain in local authority superannuation schemes.

Rules enabling municipal operators to borrow money on the open market would be relaxed, and they would also be able to diversify into other areas of business.

Franchises are likely to be offered on a five-year basis and would be renewed if the operator performed to satisfaction.

Reid said he was anxious to organise similar meetings between ALBUM and the transport spokesmen of other parties before the election.

"We wholeheartedly support the efforts and progress of the Bus and Coach Council with politicians, but at the same time there are areas of specific concern to managers of municipal companies which need to be aired."

At a fringe meeting held by Centro at the Labour Local Government Conference in Blackpool, Prescott said the party's transport policy was one of "intervention, integration and planning."

He questioned whether park and ride was the best use of land and said he was not keen on guided bus, but he was prepared to look at all measures to promote buses along Buses Mean Business lines. He also criticised the Office of Fair Trading for preventing some cross-ticketing agreements.

On franchising he said: "I want to keep the idea of bus operators providing the service people want, even single services on a sub-contracted basis. We must get flexibility into the system, but you can have grandfather rights to ensure stability." CBW

■ BUS AND COACH

Cambus buys out Millers Coaches

Cambus Holdings has bought Millers Coaches, its largest competitor in the Cambridge area. The deal follows the retirement of proprietor Bernard Miller and involves 39 buses and coaches and 60 employees working on a mix of coach tours and contracts, tendered and commercial bus services.

Pending the appointment of a permanent manager, Cambus traffic manager, Chris Simes, is in day to day control at Millers' depot at Foxton, six miles south of Cambridge. The Millers Coaches and Millerbus trading names are being kept and the business will remain as a separate trading unit within the Cambus Holdings group, alongside Cambus, Viscount Bus & Coach and Premier Travel Services.

Cambus Holdings group managing director, Paul Merryweather, says the acquisition is part of its plan to expand its business in Mid-Anglia: "We have not looked to expand outside our territory and I did not want someone else to buy the business."

The Millers coach operations include holiday work for tour companies, an area in which Premier also operates: "It is a very good core of coach operations and is something I wouldn't want to lose. On the face of it, it looks quite profitable."

Until last autumn, Cambus and Millers were competing on several routes, including Saturday park and ride services in Cambridge. The remaining duplication, where buses run within a few minutes of each other, will be eliminated, but Mr Merryweather says there are no immediate plans to transfer routes between the two companies: "It is fair to say that Millers has some contracts for subsidised services, operated on a lower cost base, which it doesn't make any sense for us to transfer to Cambus."

Millers' older, mainly high floor vehicles will be replaced by newer Cambus vehicles and the park and ride services will be upgraded to be operated by Leyland

Cambus in Cambridge: buying Millers has removed a major competitor

National 2s and a pair of Leyland Lynx acquired from Millers.

Mr Merryweather is reluctant to say if Millers will be used as a vehicle to win low cost tenders, but concedes that Cambus is losing tendered work to operators prepared to bid low: "We've got some fairly keen tender prices and, like most people, we've got separate rotas for competitive tender work. But the trouble at present is that because coach operators have lost money on their traditional work, they are tendering for bus work at ludicrously cheap rates.

"They are winning most of the tenders, but they will end up costing them money when they discover the real cost of running bus services."

Mr Merryweather says the recent court cases in South Yorkshire Transport's favour make an MMC referral unlikely: "I think the South Yorkshire ruling has encouraged us in making a deal like this," he told Coach & Bus Week.

CAMBUS HOLDINGS

Cambus Holdings was formed by the management of Cambus and paid £1.5million to buy the company from the National Bus Company in December 1986. Cambus was split in two in 1989, with Viscount taking over the northern area based around Peterborough. Most of Premier's operations were bought from the AJS Group in 1990.

Shearings deal completed

The second stage of the Timeline Travel formation was completed last week with the acquisition of the Shifnal-based operations from Shearings by its former transport director, Ian Longworth.

It follows the transfer of north west operations last month and the opening of a new depot at Lowton near Wigan.

The Shifnal base was extensively modified after the purchase of Archway Motors by Shearings in 1989, and controls Shropshire operations as well as competitive commercial services in Telford operated against Drawlane subsidiary Red North.

The operations are substantially different in the West Midlands Traffic area, from those in the north west. In addition to the depot, 21 buses and coaches and two taxis have been acquired.

Vehicles acquired include single and double deckers as well as F-reg Leyland Tigers, the first for the Timeline fleet.

Thirty drivers and manager Gerald Cooper will all stay with the new company.

Managing director, Ian Longworth said that the operations would remain unchanged: "In this part of the world we provide every service to the community from school buses and excursions to local routes and even a market day town service in Newport."

Longworth emphasised that the purchasing had not yet been completed. "There is a third stage still to come and that will include the travel office at Bolton bus station," he said. CBW

In the increasingly competitive bus and coach business, no company can afford to ignore something that gives them both an operational and marketing edge.

Yet, Wayfarer have come up with just that something. A range of products that cater for the very latest smart card technology. Contact or contact less, from secure memory right through to high capacity Microprocessor based cards.

Even existing Wayfarer 3 users have been carefully considered. Without any fuss, the ticket machines can be upgraded to the integrated card reader versions. Very simply and cost effectively.

Also, remote smart card validators easily connect to the Wayfarer 2 and 3 ticket machines, and complement our range of high-co Magnetic Card readers.

As for the next stage, Wayfarer's portable ticket machine combines smart and magnetic technologies in one model.

Beat the competitors queue, and take Wayfarer on board now. Then, you'll be even smarter with our systems.

Make sure your operation benefits from Wayfarer technology.

After all, if you don't take the systems on board, you can be certain your competitors will.

Watson back on the buses

Outspoken East Midland managing director George Watson was back in the bus industry last week – less than seven days after being forced to resign from management in the Stagecoach group.

Watson has taken over as operations director at independent Sheffield Omnibus after buying out the 25 per cent stake held by original founder Bob Thompson. Watson resigned from his position at East Midland on the morning after the Bus and Coach Council dinner after being told that his management style was “not appropriate for the future direction of the company.”

Informed sources suggest that Watson's flamboyant style of management flew in the face of the group's structured management approach although Mr Watson was unwilling to discuss any reasons for his resignation: “I don't want to go over the past. Let's just say that East Midland has been brought out of the red into being the second most profitable company (in the Stagecoach group) since I've been here.”

He joined Stagecoach in 1989 after three successful years as general manager of Clydeside Scottish and a spell as traffic manager with Western Scottish. Stagecoach seconded him to help set up the Docklands Transit project with Harry Blundred before appointing him to East Midland.

During his spell at Chesterfield-based East Midland, Mr Watson bypassed the union and started negotiating individual contracts. He also faced a number of unfair dismissal actions as key union men were dismissed.

He also slimmed down the middle management structure, with depot traffic superintendents reporting directly to him. Fellow director Peter Jenner was declared supernumerary as Mr Watson reduced the working directors of the company to one.

His replacement as managing director Robert Harvey (see Coach and Bus Week Moves) said there would be a staff reorganization after a new operations director was appointed for the company.

Mr Watson moved swiftly to secure Bob Thompson's £250 worth of shares in Basichour Ltd, the parent company of Sheffield Omnibus. Thompson was one of the four original founders, but had found it hard living away from his family.

Led by managing director, Ian Dyson, Omnibus has grown to 36 vehicles in 12 months with all the directors managing hands on. “I'm pleased to be joining a young, progressive organisation,” said Mr Watson. “This is a good job in a real competitive climate.”

Harvey new MD

Robert Harvey has taken over as managing director of East Midland following the sudden departure of George Watson.

Mr. Harvey, 47, joins the Chesterfield based company from fellow Stagecoach subsidiary, Bluebird Northern of Aberdeen, where he was finance director for the last three years. He joined the bus industry in 1975 as accountant at Western SMT of Kilmarnock and moved 18 months later to MacBraynes haulage of Glasgow as company secretary and deputy general manager.

Mr. Harvey was appointed finance manager of SBG Engineering of Edinburgh in 1983, before moving to Northern in 1988.

■ BUS

Sheffield Council step into street saga

Sheffield City Council has stepped into the long running battle to limit the number of buses in the city's congested central shopping streets.

It has applied to the North Eastern Traffic Commissioner to place a traffic regulation condition on buses using the High Street/Church Street and Haymarket/Waingate routes on grounds of excessive traffic congestion and road safety. The council wants use of these streets to be restricted to buses making genuine cross-city journeys and for services terminating in the city to be diverted to the new Pond Street interchange on the edge of the shopping centre.

The move follows months of unsuccessful attempts to achieve a voluntary reduction in bus numbers.

South Yorkshire Transport announced an apparent agreement last November for all operators' services to be reduced by 15 per cent. Since then, several operators – including Sheffield Omnibus and Yorkshire Terrier – say they have made these reductions, but they question whether SYT has cut its services. Yorkshire Terrier managing director, Bill Baldwin, says SYT is operating duplicate services on some routes.

South Yorkshire PTE is trying to introduce a voluntary code of practice governing use of the busiest city streets, with a ban on excessive waiting times and unnecessary empty bus movements, but has still to secure agreement. Baldwin says he is reluctant to lose the opportunity of future expansion and says the PTE's proposals lack teeth.

Most operators want the council to take the initiative and Roger Donnison, head of the city's transportation policy unit, says: “The operators can argue about the conditions, but my view is that they would welcome some sort of external policy. They would prefer something they all have to meet, including new entrants to the market, rather than look to what co-signatories to a voluntary agreement may do.” CBW

■ Thames Transit subsidiary has bought four more used Volvo B10Ms to meet increased demand on its Oxford tube London express service. The four take the Thames Transit high-line coach fleet strength to 16 vehicles. Managing director, Janet Blundred, describes business as thriving: "The Ikarus coaches have proved so popular that more and more people are switching to the Tube. Numbers are up 40 per cent year on year."

■ City of Oxford Motor Services has introduced a new coach service linking Oxford, Woodstock, Shipston-on-Stour and Stratford-upon-Avon. The new X49 and X50 services offer Monday to Saturday running with three journeys a day in each direction. X50 was won from Burman Travel of Tamworth under tender from Oxfordshire County Council.

■ Stevenson's of Uttoxeter is to buy four Leyland Swifts with bodywork as an adapted version of Wright's Handybus design. To cope with the higher floor and mid-engined layout of the Swifts, as opposed to the rear-engined Dennis Dart, for which the body was designed, the Alusuisse construction has been altered.

■ The Merseyside Passenger Transport Authority has approved, in principle, multi-million pound developments of bus station facilities in central Liverpool. Proposals envisage the building of new terminal facilities at the Roe Street/Hood Street gyratory, together with a comprehensive redevelopment of adjoining Queens Square, and the replacement of the present Central Bus Station with a new facility.

■ Metro Transad has been awarded the contract for advertising on the 1,000-strong Merseybus fleet. The Merseybus win boosts Metro Transad's share of the overall UK transport advertising sheetage to 12 per cent. The company's portfolio already includes the exclusive contract for all transport advertising on Ulsterbus and Citibus in Northern Ireland.

■ BUS

Low floor buses for LT

Britain's first low floor city buses could be running before the end of the year, if Department of Transport and London Transport plans are implemented.

Andrew Braddock, head of LT's unit for disabled passengers, plans to lease a demonstration fleet of low floor buses to an operator for one route in the capital and Anne Frye, head of the DTP's disability unit, has funds available in 1992/93 for a demonstration outside London. They are co-operating in drawing up a specification for buses which will combine UK Diptac features with a low floor and wheelchair access.

British suppliers will be invited to build the buses, but they are more likely to be imported. Dutch builders Den Oudsten and Berkhof already build suitable vehicles, as do Mercedes-Benz, MAN, Setra, Neoplan and Scania.

The DTP is about to invite bids from local authorities and operators to run between 10 and 12 buses on a single route in an urban area. It will monitor the success of the service, to determine the effect on running times, congestion, boarding times and patronage so longer-term policies can then be drawn up for accessible buses.

The DTP will fund the extra cost of the trial batch of low floor buses, compared with conventional rear-engined city buses like the Optare Delta. Ms Frye expects this will work out at around £25,000 per bus, taking account of converting Continental designs to right-hand-drive and fitting DiPTAC features like textured handrails which are not used in Europe.

■ BUS

AVE planning bus imports

Low-floor buses may be imported to Britain from Holland by Q-Drive subsidiary AVE Berkhof.

New models planned this year include DAF-based vehicles and, subject to chassis availability, the Volvo B6R midi.

Two other new products, which AVE already has firm orders for, are the first 10-metre Dennis Javelin and a 57-seat 3.7-metre high Excellence 2000HL with a ramped floor on a Volvo B10M chassis, which is destined for Cantabrica Holidays.

Firm orders for Berkhof coaches have come from Tellings Golden Miller of Byfleet, Halcyon of Hull and Thomas Coaches of Rhondda.

AVE Berkhof sales director, David Waterman, said: "The market is going to be tough again in 1992 but, with a broad range of quality products and a good customer base, I am confident that we'll do as well as we did last year."

Dennis wins £6million MoD order

Dennis Specialist Vehicles has won a £6million order to supply the Ministry of Defence with 137 Javelin coach chassis for delivery by the end of next year.

The chassis will be a mixture of lengths - mainly 10 metre and 12 metre but some 8.5 metre - and will include both right and left-hand-drive models. All will have Cummins C-series engines and ZF S6-90 gearboxes.

Bodywork will be by Wadham Stringer, the main contractor, and the contract was won through competitive tender.

Roger Heard, Dennis SV sales director, said: "We are delighted to be supplying our Javelins to meet MoD requirements.

Dennis Javelin: 137 for delivery to MoD by next year

This order, worth almost £6million, is one of the biggest in the company's history.

"The various Javelin models have a high degree of component commonality which is important in any fleet operation and particularly so in military use."

Dennis parent Trinity Holdings reports a record order book for its buses, coaches and refuse vehicles, and is taking on more staff in spite of the recession in its core markets. Group companies Dennis Eagle, Dennis Specialist Vehicles and Duple (Metsec) have received orders over the last four months worth more than £50million. CBW

COACH

Plaxton relaunches 425 integral coach

Plaxton is relaunching the integral 425 coach design bought three years ago from Duple. But it is still Cummins powered.

Plaxton is building 12 at its Carrosserie Lorraine plant in France to test UK demand and will sell them through its Kirkby Coach & Bus dealership in Anston.

Prices have yet to be fixed, but expect them to be close to those for semi-integral Scania with Plaxton Premiere bodies.

One major marketing change is a reduction in seating capacity. When it was launched by Duple, the 425 was available to 63 fixed seats, but the first Lorraine-built models will have 53 Plaxton-built seats and centre mounted toilet. Plaxton marketing manager, Kevin Wood, says this reflects changing practice: "Major fleet customers we're quoting for next year are talking about less than 53 seats. Wallace Arnold wants 50 and we are getting vibes that other companies are thinking of less than the maximum too."

The 425 forms part of Plaxton's long-term export strategy, but there is no immediate plan to build left hand drive models.

The basic specification is unchanged since the 425's launch in 1984/85: Cummins L10-290 engine and integral construction using Cromwell 3CR12 stainless steel. Kerb weight is still around 11.3 tonnes and luggage capacity is 13 cu metres. But it now has more Plaxton standard parts and significant detailed changes overcome weaknesses in the Duple product.

The seven speed ZF gearbox has been replaced by the eight speed 8S190 model and, instead of the cable shift used before, it has a more precise swing link change similar to that on the Dennis Javelin.

Type Approval, which has delayed the resumption of production, demanded more powerful brakes which now include a Telma 191 retarder as standard and Category 1 ABS as well as improved noise insulation in the engine bay and an upgraded silencer.

Ventilation has been improved and the front wiper linkage has been changed to Plaxton's standard, creating space for a more powerful demister and more legroom around the clutch pedal.

■ Both versions of the new DAF DB250/Optare Spectra double decker are available with Voith automatic transmission options. Operators can choose a four-speed D854.2 on the Intercity bus, and the D851.2 three-speeder on the Citybus.

■ A major UITP conference is to be held in Paris on violence and vandalism on buses. Forty specialist speakers and experts will discuss the issues at the conference which runs from May 11-13. The seminars will be complemented by an exhibition of the latest technology in graffiti management and anti-mugging devices. Registration is by contacting the UITP on fax: 010 32 2 660 1072.

■ London United has been forced to run minibuses, instead of deckers on several routes – thanks to weight limits on Hammersmith Bridge. The minibuses will run on routes 9 Mortlake-Liverpool Street, 283 East Acton-Hammersmith, and the night bus N93. Frequency will increase at times, but the N93 will be diverted to use Putney Bridge.

■ Two new bus services for Strawberry Vale and Hanworth, will start on May 9. Both services were won, on tender, by London United.

Route R70 Richmond-Hampton Nurserieslands is to be extended to Hanworth, while R68 Hampton Court Station-Richmond will change to take in Strawberry Vale and extended to link Kew Gardens and Hampton Court.

■ A Black Country Development Grant has enabled West Midlands Special Needs Transport to buy three mobility dial-a-ride minibuses. The £75,000 investment in 10-seater Mercedes 408D conversions, will serve 70,000 handicapped people in Walsall and Sandwell.

■ Unrestricted parking in the eastern Highway and Wapping areas is to be curtailed by the London Borough of Tower Hamlets, according to the Metropolitan Police.

Four capital boroughs get £1/2m for priorities

Four London Boroughs have been allocated £500,000 for bus priority measures as part of the 1992/3 Transport Policies and Programme submissions, and further resources are being held for possible allocation when firm proposals from south and west London and Tower Hamlets have been submitted.

The allocation of £200,000 for Newham, and £100,000 each for Haringey, Camden and Ealing, has been warmly welcomed by London operators. Last month public transport minister, Roger Freeman, announced the allocation of £3million funding for 21 authorities outside London.

Freeman said: 'The £500,000 we have allocated today will enable four London boroughs to introduce a number of measures to help speed up the progress of buses. Further resources will be allocated next year for other schemes.'

"This is the first time the department has asked London boroughs to submit specific bus priority measures for funding and I have been delighted by the response. The boroughs are giving serious consideration to role of the problems of our urban environment.'

The allocation should fund bus lanes in Acton and Ealing, and a TRANSYT system of junction priorities.

Haringey Borough is now set to install a north-bound bus lane in Wood Green High Road, one of the busiest bus routes in the country, and a southbound lane further down Green Lanes. Peak flows of up to 79 buses per hour in the High Road – 74 on Saturdays – and 45 per hour along Green Lanes are common.

Haringey's allocation fell £25,000 short of its bid. Newham Borough intends to install bus lanes along the A124 Barking Road/A11 Leytonstone High Road/A118 Romford Road, although its allocation was also £26,000 short. N Camden, new bus lanes will be introduced along the Hampstead Road/Chalk Farm/Highgate Road and Fortress Road. CBW

Nat Welsh sell-off sparks free-for-all...

Competition has increased massively in National Welsh's operating area after receivers sold off most of its depots.

A number of operators have moved services into the area sparking off a free-for-all.

National Welsh's Porth, Aberdare and Merthyr depots have been bought by Julian Peddle's consortium for £750,000.

The consortium which is backed by Midland Fox managing director, David Martin, and PMT parent company Butler Woodhouse, now trades as Rhondda Bus.

Former National Welsh's management and staff are also involved in the new company.

The Aberdare and Merthyr depots were sold on rapidly to an off-the-shelf company Offademo, owned by Cynon Valley Transport managing director, George Shaw, and three councillor directors from the municipal, who immediately closed the Aberdare depot.

Rhondda Bus has subsequently bought the Caerphilly depot from the receivers, KPMG Peat Marwick, adding 18 drivers and 12 vehicles to the 89 vehicles and 180 staff based at Porth.

Peddle said: "We looked at National Welsh's Porth operation and decided it had an excellent revenue base and a good workforce. We have set aside 15 per cent of the shares for the employees and Bob Gilbert, Roy Godfrey and John Sweeting will be moving to Porth from the old National Welsh head office.

"We urgently need to spend money on the properties and the fleet. Buying new vehicles will be a high priority. The staff are glad that the uncertainty is over and that the company has new owners who they have actually seen."

Attempts by KPMG Peat Marwick to find buyers for National Welsh's Bridgend depot have failed and it has been shut. However negotiations over the future of the remaining base, Barry, which is still open, were going on as Coach and Bus Week went to press.

Many former National Welsh staff have secured employment with other operators which have rushed in to fill the gaps.

Mark Thomas' Western Travel, which this time last year bought National Welsh's eastern operations, has moved about 40 vehicles into the area.

Twenty seven minis are operating in Merthyr, where they are competing against Offademo as the Valley Bus Company. The remaining vehicles are based at Pengam in the Rhymney Valley and run big bus services to Caerphilly and Newport in one direction and Cardiff in the other.

Other operators which have thrown their hats into the south Wales ring include Badgerline subsidiary South Wales Transport, which is now running in Bridgend, and Cardiff City Transport continues to run its newly registered services in Caerphilly.

However, Jones Motors, Bebbs Travel and Red & White have retreated from the Rhondda following the appearance of Rhondda Bus.

The competition in Merthyr is particularly intense, with over 100 departures an hour from the bus station, but Western Travel chairman, Mark Thomas, said he was pleased with the progress made by his operation so far.

"We are very happy with our Merthyr operation which Red & White started at very short notice. Passenger numbers and revenue levels are in line with our expectations for this competitive phase."

...as Cardiff Bus moves in

The collapse of National Welsh has hastened the first fleet order for Plaxton's aluminium-framed Verde bus body.

As part of a 50-vehicle expansion to replace National Welsh in Caerphilly and the Vale of Glamorgan, Cardiff Bus has bought 14 of the 15 Verde-bodied Scania N113CRB 51-seat single deckers built for stock last year. They replace Metrorider midibuses on routes in south Cardiff, freeing them up to help provide the 20 new services from February 24.

The council-owned company is spending around £1.4million on the fleet expansion. It has acquired used Renault S56s from Plymouth Citybus and has hired similar buses from West Midlands Travel.

Additional staff, some former National Welsh employees, are being recruited for the new services and are being retrained by Cardiff Bus.

Managing director,

Frank Yates, says the Verdes are better suited to the south Cardiff services: "We found the midis did generate some additional passengers after we deployed them some years ago, but they're quite busy routes and we took the view that single deckers are probably better. The routes in the Vale of Glamorgan and Caerphilly are natural midibus services." He says the company was impressed by the Verde when it placed a single deck order last year, but that order went to the Leyland Lynx instead: "Given that the Lynx is no longer available, we had to re-examine the type of single decker we wanted. We already liked what we had seen of the Verde and these vehicles were available.

"We would have bought single deckers in any event in 1992/93, so we have brought this order forward to deploy them to best effect on our main network. And that gives us the wherewithal to address our new service registrations."

Cardiff already operates seven Scania buses and coaches and has also ordered three Alexander-bodied Scania N113DRB double deckers for April delivery. For the first six months, they will operate a special shuttle service between Cardiff and the National Garden Festival at Ebbw Vale, after which they will be used for normal fleet replacement.

Labour and TGWU draw up workers charter

Labour and the Transport and General Workers Union has launched the London Busworkers' Charter - a four point pledge to all busworkers in the capital.

If elected, Labour has pledged to:

- Scrap all plans to deregulate London.
- Place all bus services under the control of an elected Greater London Authority.
- Replace route tendering with network franchising, with London divided into six to ten areas.

- Negotiate wages and conditions centrally to apply to all franchise areas and to every company within those areas, with one set of rates and conditions for OPO drivers, crew drivers, conductors, midi drivers and each grade of engineering support staff.

The charter aims to increase quality and reliability of services, restore the status of the industry and employee, raise training and maintenance standards, improve vehicle design and civilise industrial relations. The Charter also says midibuses will be used only to increase mobility and not cut wages, but there will be scope for the payment of locally negotiated bonuses in certain conditions.

■ The Womens' Passenger Charter is due to be launched next week. It has been drawn up to highlight the ways in which transport systems fail to meet the needs of women and the improvements women are calling for.

MRN bus blaze: arson suspected

Police suspect arson as the cause of a £3 million blaze which destroyed or badly damaged 24 vehicles belonging to Midland Red North's Stafford operation.

But just two weeks after the fire the company is moving to a new site in the town.

Arson is suspected, as the fire started in the early hours of Sunday morning at the beginning of the month, when the town centre depot was closed and locked up.

A total of 24 vehicles were either completely lost or severely damaged, with a further number suffering extensive smoke damage.

Nevertheless a full service was maintained on the Monday with vehicles drafted in from other depots in the company.

Additional buses have now been loaned to the company from sister companies in the Drawlane Group, as well as Grimsby Cleethorpes Transport and Trent Buses.

A new base at BRC in the Queensville area of the town has been partially used since the fire and will become a formal base until structural damage to the garage is rectified.

MRN commercial manager, Chris Chattoe, said 18 minibuses, two midibuses and four single deckers were badly damaged.

Thamesway and Transcity win London routes

Kentish Bus route 51 goes to London Central.

The latest round of London Transport route tenders have been won by private sector operators Thamesway and Transcity.

London Northern and London Central, both London Buses subsidiaries, have each won and lost routes.

Routes 214 (Parliament Hill Fields - London Bridge) and W7 (Finsbury Park - Muswell Hill) came into the tendering system for the first time. W7 stays with London Northern and 214 goes to Thamesway, which is to purchase 16 Dennis Darts and recruit more than 35 drivers to operate from new premises in the Tufnell Park area.

The ending of the current route 51 (Woolwich - Orpington) and 286 (Greenwich - Eltham) contracts will see the 51 going from Kentish Bus to London Central and the 286 from London Central to Transcity of Sidcup.

Managing director, Peter Hobcraft, said the company would buy eight new Dennis Darts, taking his fleet size up to 48, and recruit about 20 drivers when the route started this autumn.

No jobs for smokers at Quickstep

Non-smoking drivers, key to new Quickstep Travel's high service standards, are on the road running three new routes from west Leeds to the City centre.

Competing with Yorkshire Rider, Nigel Jolliffe's new smoke-free company selected just nine drivers and one fitter out of 150 applicants.

The operation, set up with partner Philip Dance is based in Hunslet and operates eight second-hand, but extensively refurbished, Leyland Nationals Half-hourly daytime frequencies are maintained from Monday to Saturday. The drivers are the image builders of Quickstep Travel. We've got ultra-clean buses and give helpful and courteous service to all our passengers but that could all be spoilt by a driver smoking," said Mr Jolliffe.

The company claims in its publicity that its buses are cleaned 'properly' every night and that single deckers are easily accessible to everyone. After one week of operation, Mr Jolliffe said the company had bedded-in well.

■ COVER STORY

"A fighter who will come back"

STUART JOHNSON MAY BE DOWN, BUT HE IS CERTAINLY NOT OUT. HE WILL BE BACK, HE TELLS IAN GRIFFIN.

The recent changes at Stuart Johnson Ltd have caused much speculation within the industry but Stuart Johnson himself is at pains to stress that he is "pleased that he has been able to retain an association with the company that he previously owned."

Others are not so sure and on one hand question Scania's decision to remove him from the central role whilst also doubting his apparent whole-hearted agreement with Scania's decision.

Founded in February 1983, Stuart Johnson Ltd became Scania's main dealer in September 1986 following approaches from both DAF and Scania. Johnson chose the Scania route out of a belief "that chassis manufacturers are set to become more powerful than body builders" and that "a solus deal was vital". Expansion quickly followed with turnover increasing from £350,000 in 1983 to £20 million in 1990.

However, the expansion was not without problems. The initial growth after the appointment as main dealer by Scania necessitated a move away from Harthill and in March 1988 Stuart Johnson acquired a greenfield site in Worksop. Building was quickly commenced and the purpose-built premises opened in January 1989. Thus the significant additional costs coincided almost exactly with the start of the worst depression ever seen by dealers in the British Bus and Coach Industry.

By September 1989 it became clear that a financial restructuring must take place if further progress was to be made and hence Johnson approached Scania which agreed to inject finance into Stuart Johnson Ltd in March 1990.

In doing so Scania had established a dealer foothold in the UK to ensure the continuing presence of their quality products and Stuart Johnson had ensured that despite the recession the future was healthier.

With the new finance in place Stuart Johnson Ltd continued on its policy of reducing stock levels to an acceptable level. At the same time it continued to nurture a client base that now included: Busways; Yorkshire Traction; Yorkshire Rider; Cardiff, Brighton & Hove, Shearings and Applebys. But continuing high finance costs relating to both new and used stock prevented the company from true 'recovery' and early this year Scania agreed to acquire the remaining stock in Stuart Johnson Ltd held by Johnson and his wife Kathryn. Whilst Scania now controls the major dealership for which it must have craved Johnson is not so fortunate – he is left with a consultancy agreement with Scania which must restrict his activity although he states that without Scania's involvement his position would now be worse. So where to now?

At the age of 54, after 34 years in the coach and bus industry, Stuart Johnson looks set to start again.

For Scania, it's business as usual. Don MacIntosh is now running Stuart Johnson Ltd and rumour has it this will shortly be renamed and will provide the new and used coach outlet for Scania in the UK with the exception of Scotland. Bus Sales will be handled directly by Scania (Great Britain) from its Milton Keynes headquarters, a move which Johnson says reflects Scania's view that "there's not part-exchange on bus and therefore the manufacturer can handle it direct and take the margin." Johnson accepts the quality of the Scania product will ensure their continued strong presence in the UK market.

Johnson himself is faced with several options. He accepts that "it's a very difficult industry to fund and therefore suits the big players." With this in mind he will make the most of his consultancy agreement with Scania and additionally look to market non-competitive product. Certainly he will do so with the support of MacIntosh who describes him as "a fighter who will come back and I wish him the best of luck." It's a feeling that is mutually shared. But having known him for some time it is hard to imagine this proving sufficient challenge in the long term and a move to join a major organisation within the bus and coach industry must be a distinct possibility. Failing that, if Scania drop the Stuart Johnson name who would bet against him resurrecting it. He's only 54 and there must be a number of manufacturers who would value the 34 years experience he can boast.

Anderson's trio

Ex-professional footballer, Mark Anderson has scored a hat-trick... with the birth of his first child and the delivery of two new DAF SB3000 Algarve 1 coaches from Salvador Caetano.

Mark, a former player with Tranmere Rovers, was delighted when wife Sarah gave birth to daughter Emma and equally delighted with the arrival of the new additions to his fleet.

'I decided to buy the coaches when I visited the NEC show at Birmingham,' he said.

'It was obvious to me that when the existing stock of new coaches has been sold, operators will be facing much higher prices for new vehicles.'

Mark started his coaching operation, based at Tower Bridge, in 1988, and considers he was in the right place at the right time.

He now runs six Algarves and two other vehicles - the oldest an E-reg. His current work consists of a mix of contracts, incoming tourists and an increasing amount of business house work.

His latest vehicles are to exec spec with centre toilet, drinks machine and fridge.

Proud new arrivals are, top: the DAF SB3000 Algarves, and right: Young Emma with mum and dad, Mark and Sarah.

One of the 15 new Optare MetroRiders which Welcome Services is running in Tyne and Wear.

Warm Welcome for MetroRiders

Fifteen new generation Optare MetroRiders are spearheading Welcome Passenger Services of Gateshead's new Tyne and Wear local service operation.

The buses have been bought for use on commercial routes 120 and 400, a figure-of-eight two direction circuit linking the Newcastle suburbs of Walker and Chapel House.

Each vehicle is manufactured to the popular fastflow specification, which with its wide entrance door, allows simultaneous boarding and alighting, reducing time at bus stops and increasing profitability.

DiPTAC features are fitted to ensure passenger safety and help the elderly and disabled in the 29-seater buses, which have standee capacity of 13.

The exterior livery is in a striking yellow, red and blue.

According to Chris Wallace, Welcome's chairman: 'The MetroRider is a busman's bus, designed specifically for the job it has to do. Reliability and economy have been highly evident from the beginning of their operation.'

Dunn opts for Leyland Tiger

Dunnline Travel, the Cinderhill, Nottingham-based operation, has expanded its fleet with the purchase of one of the last Leyland Tigers to be registered. The vehicle, bought from Yeates, the Volvo-owned dealership, comes with appropriate DLT registration.

It has Plaxton Paramount 3200 bodywork, fitted with 53 reclining seats, soft trim and radio/PA/cassette.

The Cummins-powered vehicle was supplied in white, ready for application of Dunnline signwriting and logo.

Bob Dunn, who took over the former Netherfield coach business in 1984, is a firm believer in buying a vehicle to do the work - and fitting the driver to do the job.

His philosophy extends to deciding the type of vehicle he wants but, beyond that he says: 'It's down to the deal you get.'

Javelin on target for Tates

An 'offer they couldn't refuse' has led brothers Alan and Stan Tate to the purchase of their first Dennis Javelin.

The Markyate, Hertfordshire, operation has been running for 45 years, and Tates new vehicle joins a fleet of eight vehicles which cover the full range of work from continental tours to school contracts.

The company has a long-standing 'buy new' policy and recent purchases have included Bova and other DAF-powered coaches.

The new Javelin/Algarve 1 is fitted with 53 reclining seats and is to full touring spec.

Classique buses for "Tracky"

The financial collapse of the CG Whittaker group, of which bodybuilder Europa was a part, has meant that Yorkshire Traction has had to wait a while for the delivery of its new vehicles.

But the company has now taken four 33-seat buses from the members of the Europa team who set up Autobus Classique. These Classique-completed vehicles were, at the time of the Whittaker collapse, contracted by a number of finance houses.

Said Tracky's chairman and managing director, Frank Carter: "Since our own privatisation five years ago, we have bought a lot of buses from local manufacturers, such as Optare of Leeds, and Reeve Burgess of Chesterfield, as well as Europa. I am delighted that the Europa team is now back in action as Autobus Classique and that Yorkshire Traction has taken four vehicles from them.

New Volvos for Burnley & Pendle

With more than 30 Volvos already in its fleet, Burnley & Pendle has opted for two new 10-metre B10Ms with 45 seats, plus 20 standing, with East Lancs EL 2000 single-deck bodywork.

The two new vehicles are fitted with many DiPTAC features, including split-level entrance, shark-toothed nosing, palm-operated bell pushes, and side and rear route number blinds.

"We were looking for something to replace two of our short Leyland Leopards," explained Burnley & Pendle's engineering director, Ian Lord.

"After looking at various demonstrators, including the Optare Vecta and Dennis Dart, we decided to stick with the B10M, because this is the model we have standardised on.

With over 30 Volvos in our fleet, there didn't seem much point in changing when the B10M can be adapted to suit all our big bus needs."

Stevensons buying Handybus Swifts

Stevensons of Uttoxeter is buying four Leyland Swifts with bodywork an adapted version of Wright's Handybus design.

The Alusuisse construction has been altered to cope with the higher floor and mid-engined layout of the Swifts, as opposed to the rear engined Dennis Dart for which the body was designed.

Stevensons managing director, Julian Peddle, said: "I am very impressed with Wright's quality and construction methods. We have 20 Wright bodies in service or on order, and these include the first Volvo B6R with a Handybus body."

Competition Helps Customer Care

I had been talking to George Watson at the Bus & Coach Council annual dinner only hours before his departure from Stagecoach subsidiary, East Midland Motor Services. I found that he cherished an old public sector belief, that you can only run bus service successfully in a monopoly situation.

He refused to admit the possibility of operators co-existing in peaceful competition. It was an engaging conversation as my philosophy on this matter is somewhat different!

It also contrasted violently with the emerging thoughts that were so well put across in an interview on Radio 4 recently by Peter Shelley, operations director of Solent Blue Line. His company was a product of deregulation and is now running a substantial fleet in competition with Southampton Citybus. He was convinced that its secret of success had been to discover exactly what customers wanted from their local bus services, and then meet that expectation.

A few days ago I saw a graph depicting the value of sales made over the past two years by a bevy of well known high street traders. Every one of these household names had a graph line which showed a depressing and dramatic fall over the last six to nine months.

There was a single exception, the graph line for which indicated steady, encouraging, upwards progress, with barely a wiggle indicative of recession. It was that of a store with an international reputation for giving ordinary people extraordinary value for money, who rarely have sales, and who are renowned for their staff training and care: Marks & Spencer.

Competition is the device which makes all employees grasp that they have to be 'user friendly.'

I have instanced just these two examples of the benefits of customer orientation, but many more abound. It is, I believe, one of the almost unnoticed phenomena of our times, that the number one success strategy is now customer appreciation and care.

Even if I did not have an ingrained distrust of monopolies, I feel that I would fast be coming round to the view that monopoly trading is impossible today in law, in practice and in concept. For it is surely becoming more and more apparent that competition is the device which makes all employees in any business, but especially bus and coach operation, grasp that they all have to be 'user friendly' if their prospects, aspirations, and even jobs, are to have a future.

At my level of operation, I live with competition, and love it. Were I ever to have the misfortune to find myself running a major concern with a near monopoly market, my inclination would be to, quietly, encourage a measure of competition onto the scene in order to keep me and all staff on our toes at all times.

In my estimation, competition is a good bed fellow of being consumer orientated, but monopolies can create casual customer care.

What a funny lot we are...

Aren't we a funny old industry? Our drivers expect to get free food, as well as 'commissions' for simply pulling in to the coach park of an eating establishment or taking passengers to the turnstile of a tourist attraction.

Coach operators expect hotels and other attraction providers to host them on educationalists. It's the same when we visit manufacturers.

The greatest incongruity of all is the BCC dinner. It is OUR function to which we might, according to the normal rules of decency and etiquette, have been expected to play host to any guests which we might care to invite along to share this fine event. But do we? Do we heck!

The vast majority of those attending come as guests of suppliers to the industry. As one of the few who paid for my supper, I find this decidedly odd, but, as I said, we are a funny old industry, aren't we?

Aiming for a transport utopia

Another little snippet which I gleaned also related to maintaining the monopoly, is that the rethinking of Euro-funding of UK projects puts into doubt the planned reopening of a passenger railway line running through central Nottinghamshire.

Irrespective of the effect on the monopoly of the dominant bus operators there, this does not strike me as an unmitigated disaster as it is a probable mis-application of Euro-funds.

At a village idiot simpleton level, if this line had any potential at all to carry passengers it is from a large residential area of Hucknall into nearby Nottingham.

But the game of local authority 'oneupmanship' has also resulted in plans for a Light Rapid Transit scheme from the aforesaid Hucknall into Nottingham.

Talk about over-egging the pudding!

One wonders whether the proverbial village idiot does not, in fact, enjoy more sanity than some transport planners!

The dream of integrated transport has been denied by the clumsy actions of politicians and transport planners.

This dream of integrated transport has been denied to the nation by the clumsy and ill-founded actions of politicians and transport planners

My opposition to the reopening of minor passenger lines, as one who does use British Rail quite a bit, is based on the view that Inter-City is quite good and does have a considerable, and valuable, role to play in public transport, but that the days of a station serving every village have long since passed.

What 50 years of Road Service Licensing did for this country was to create so much conflict between modes of public transport that we have never had even a remotely integrated transport infrastructure.

I am heartened to hear Virgins's Richard Branson and Brian Souter, of Stagecoach, expressing an interest in taking over some rail operations.

If this leads us to a time when we have Inter-City trains which offer reliable connectional facilities, and through ticketing, from and to local bus and express services, we will indeed be moving towards a transport utopia.

This dream of integrated transport has been denied to the nation by the clumsy and ill-founded actions of politicians and transport planners.

Without them it might have come some years ago, and thereby avoided some of the problems of congestion and high car usage which now beset us.

I always favoured deregulation at the simple level of removing unnecessary restrictions on the uses of coaches and buses.

I earnestly believe it will also be a great bonus if it leads to a better rail system too.

Time is Money

Will a 62mph speed limit devastate the economics of coach services and finally bring a third lane ban? Alan Millar has been seeking the views of leading operators.

It is the political battle the coach industry knows it cannot win. EC transport ministers have agreed a directive on fitting speed limiters to coaches and trucks in the member states, effectively setting a new maximum speed limit throughout Europe. Were the directive about almost anything else - the designation of the carrot as a fruit or the fate of Twyford Down - it would provoke an outcry, but this one will go through without a whimper. Politicians, the national press and, above all, the general public think trucks and coaches travel too fast. Our MPs will not be moved to oppose it.

But it could have a serious effect on coach operations. The directive requires all new coaches to be fitted with speed limiters set at 100km/h (62.1mph) from January 1, 1994 and for vehicles first used on or after July 1, 1988 to have them fitted by January 1995 for international journeys and January 1996 for national journeys.

As all post-1974 UK coaches already have to be fitted with speed limiters set at 70mph, logic suggests that when the directive is translated into British law, the new limits will apply to all coaches. Otherwise, older coaches will be permitted to run 8mph faster than new ones.

On the same dates, trucks must be fitted with limiters set at 85km/h (52.8mph), but a five per cent tolerance in the speed setting means they can run at up to 90km/h (56mph). There is no similar tolerance for coaches; 100km/h is absolute. And that helps explain the industry's hostility to the directive and its last ditch attempts to block it.

The industry's concern is less about the limit as of the relative difference between the speeds of coaches and other road users. If the new limit for trucks reduces the speed of traffic in the middle lanes of motorways to 56mph, but cars in the outside lane continue to travel at over 70mph, coaches could effectively be excluded from the outside lane. They will be stuck behind slower trucks, unable to pull out into faster traffic.

There even is the chance that the Government would use the speed limiter directive to introduce a formal outside lane ban.

Shearings' tour services director, Jimmy King, suspects the new rules could lead to public pressure for a third lane ban. "If coaches are stuck in the outside lane on an incline at 62mph, will motorists complain that coaches are too slow? Now, they think they are doing 95mph when they are governed at 70mph. Or will they press for them to be banned from the outside lane?"

Scottish Citylink Coaches managing director Guido Crolla is also resigned to a third lane ban. "We would like to be able to use the outside lane, but at 62mph it could be difficult. From a practical point of view, it would increase congestion and as a car driver I know I wouldn't like coaches to pull out at 62mph." The positive side, he hopes, is that the lower speed limit will give a much-needed boost to the public's perception of coach safety.

Speed limits: more congestion, slower journeys, higher prices

But both Jimmy King and Wallace Arnold operations director Stephen Barber say the lower speed limit will increase the risk of accidents, by causing bunching in the middle lane.

Barber also says it could increase the cost of reaching some tour destinations at ends of long motorways and dual carriageways A-roads, as journey times will extend and relief drivers may be required. He suggests this could add to the costs of holidays in resorts like Falmouth and St Ives which already are less popular than nearer destinations like Torquay.

As well as being more expensive, longer journey times would also be unpopular. "It is turning the clock back 20 years. Tourists to Torquay then spent their first night in Bristol. I don't think they would accept that now."

Barber believes the frustration of driving behind trucks on motorways will shift coaches on to quieter A-roads like the A1 and A38. "Between us, with our interchange at South Mimms and Shearings' at Scratchwood, we run 40 coaches mostly up the M1 in convoy. You will get that moving on to the A1 instead."

Both major tour operators suspect it might lead to more powerful - and consequently more expensive - coaches being required to ensure that they maintain the maximum speed uphill as well as on the level. Shearings' most powerful coaches are 276hp Volvo B10Ms, but Wallace Arnold already has some 340hp models to maintain constant speeds. Volvo's 400hp B12R - expected in Britain as a three-axle coach - is designed to meet this same need.

Depending on when the new limits take effect, National Express need not reschedule its services before the winter 1993 timetable starts in October that year, but it suspects the main impact will be on longer motorway services where journey times go over the four-and-a-half driving duty limit and additional drivers are required at extra cost.

Guido Crolla is most concerned about the effect on Citylink's daytime Anglo-Scottish services which encounter traffic congestion. "In Scotland, there are very few times that our vehicles are travelling in excess of 62mph. We can probably live with it and we can just about handle it on overnight services to London."

He says the main difficulty for coach operators will be where drivers' hours limits are affected and Citylink may have to use additional drivers or have longer breaks at service areas. "We are currently doing surveys of passenger perceptions of stops, to see if passengers still want them," adds Crolla.

The High Flyer

Acquisition of Strath Tay Omnibuses last summer has put Yorkshire Traction's Frank Carter firmly into the big time. How does he manage four major bus companies?

Franks Carter has become an expert on air travel. He needs to, for it is the best way of getting from Barnsley to Dundee, headquarters of Strath Tay Omnibuses, the company his Yorkshire Traction group bought from the Scottish Bus Group last July. But he would be the last to claim that this is the jet set. Dundee's airport only shed grass for a concrete runway about two years ago and while some may take Club Class or champagne and caviar for granted, Carter leaves one in no doubt that he is thankful just to arrive.

His monthly visits to Scotland have also left him with the problem of what to do with the Scottish £1 notes he brings back to Barnsley. "They won't accept them when I try to spend them in the pub," he jokes.

But the idiosyncrasies are far outweighed by the benefits. He is happy to count the Scottish £1 notes flowing into a business which already has profitable bus companies in Yorkshire, Lincolnshire and Nottinghamshire and is seriously interested in further expansion. In January, he was poring over the receivers' details of National Welsh and was looking actively at two other bus companies. "We are in a situation where we live by our competitive edge at this time. In business, you're either going up or down. You rarely stand still and we'd like to be moving up."

Carter has done a lot of moving up since he became an apprentice fitter in 1954 with East Yorkshire Motor Services, then a BET company, in his native Hull. He spent 24 years at EYMS, including a break for national service, rising progressively to become assistant chief engineer. Spells as chief engineer at Lincolnshire Road Car and Northern General led, in February 1984, to his appointment as general manager (later managing director) at Yorkshire Traction, just as it faced one of the greatest upheavals of its history.

As the only NBC company operating entirely within Section 24 of the 1968 Transport Act, it depended on PTEs for its existence. Twenty per cent of its services were in West Yorkshire, 80 per cent in South Yorkshire where fares were the lowest in the country. "The maximum fare in South Yorkshire was 25p and it was so cheap to travel that people would spend 10p or 15p to travel from one of the neighbouring villages into Barnsley and just walk around for the afternoon."

That all ended as Government diktat outlawed the cheap fares subsidies and pushed South Yorkshire fares up by 250 per cent in April 1986.

Carter saw patronage fall by 30 per cent as passengers made fewer journeys, and privatisation and deregulation loomed.

He and his colleagues hammered out their buy-out plans on their way back from the famous December 1985 NBC managers' meeting in Birmingham when Nicholas Ridley had confirmed that NBC would be sold off in bits. Having taken advice, Carter urged his colleagues to support him in making a quick bid for the business and theirs was the 16th deal to go through, for £1.4 million, in January 1987.

"In hindsight, I believe it was the best decision. Prices of companies hardened as the deals went on and the Government felt it needed to get something going in the North."

What followed was sheer hard work. "You are unable to envisage the problems you will see and, remember, these were the early days of deregulation." He believes the market has yet to find its natural level and argues that the recession has only suspended competition; it will be back when retailing recovers and shoppers are back on the buses. "New entrants were coming into the market constantly and local authorities found that networks were not what they wanted and needed a lot of modification. And you don't really come to terms with tendering for school services on an annual basis until you have to do it."

As if that was not enough, Carter and fellow directors George Peach and John Myers had early ambitions to expand the business. They joined the bidding for several other NBC companies, including two in the West Country. What they got - in January 1988 - was closer to home, Lincolnshire Road Car. Their £1.6 million bid was one of nine for what was widely recognised as a long-term loss-maker. But at least Carter knew what to expect.

"We bought a balance sheet. You know what you've got in terms of assets. The problem was that the trading results were quite concerning and more concerning was the fact that in an area where results were not great and there is no large centre of population, a great many people thought ← they could compete.”

The local management team headed by MD Paul Hill - the only surviving NBC MD who did not buy his company - has had to address these challenges and after two tough years has restored the business to profit and has begun investing in new buses for the first time since 1986. “We had to pull out of Boston,” says Carter. “There were five operators competing in a small market town and we saw no future for Road Car there. There were more buses than passengers.”

But retrenchment there contrasted with a fight back in Grimsby. Before Yorkshire Traction bought the company, it had pulled out, fearing it lacked the equipment to face a competitive onslaught from the council-owned Grimsby Cleethorpes Transport, but the new owner re-opened the depot and fought back with a fleet of secondhand Sherpa minibuses, a few of which are still running.

It has been a process of trial and error, identifying the strategy needed to restore the business's fortunes and arriving at a manageable size of fleet. From 180 vehicles at the time of the acquisition, it climbed to 260 at one point before settling back to 230 today.

Perhaps not an error, but certainly a trial, was the acquisition of Gash of Newark just three months after Road Car joined the group.

Here again, too many buses - about 50 in the two fleets - were chasing too few passengers around a small market town and Carter made a successful approach to buy Gash. The plan was to run it as an autonomous business, but within months it had fallen foul of the Traffic Commissioner for poor maintenance standards and the business was merged into Road Car.

For an engineer like Carter, this was especially embarrassing. “I don't think we ever regretted the acquisition, but it was a very difficult time for us. We pride ourselves in sticking to the rules and having a good relationship with the Department of Transport. I wouldn't have wished to be seen doing otherwise. I felt the episode was messy and I was pleased to get away from it.” He puts it down to not having appreciated the problems quickly enough.

Carter on SBG sell-off: "I am very surprised at some of the prices paid. Some of those companies, certainly as stand alone companies, could be very fragile if interest rates go up."

“Gash had a very old fleet which made the Road Car fleet look modern and they were in something of an unsatisfactory condition. There was a general manager there, but he relied fairly heavily on Mrs Mutrie, the chairman and daughter of the Gash family who lived in Kent and only paid two-weekly visits to Newark.”

By 1990, the core business in Barnsley was up against some effective low cost competition and Carter was seriously considering setting up a low cost subsidiary to combat it. Instead, he bought one of the competitors, the local bus wing of Tom Jowitt Travel, retained Jowitt's services, leased an operating base at nearby Wombwell and relaunched it as Barnsley & District.

Last autumn, that business was put on a firmer footing when Rank sold Shearings' bus operations in Barnsley. Not only did Barnsley & District get the services, but to Carter's surprise the property became available too and he transferred the land and premises to Barnsley & District. An agency agreement to maintain Shearings' coaches in the area runs until August 1993.

Before Shearings' operations were acquired, Carter was already making his regular flights to Dundee, having become the only English operator to buy a Scottish Bus Group subsidiary. Strathtay was, in fact, only one of several SBG companies for which Yorkshire Traction bid and Carter's office still has a cabinet well stocked with information on the others.

He reckons he may have succeeded with his £2.5 million bid because other potential bidders were after bigger prizes. “We bid on companies we felt we could make something of and some people may not have bid if they thought it would foul up their strategy of buying one of the bigger companies.”

He got Strathtay, which competes with newly privatised Tayside in Dundee and with Stagecoach around Perth, for a fraction on prices paid for some of the other SBG companies, something he puts down in part to the protracted disposal programme and

“Our policy is to dispose of hulks and not major units. I don’t see why we should make a ready-made tool available to a competitor.”

◀ the onset of the recession. Some of the higher prices amaze him.

“I am still very surprised at some of the prices paid. I really begin to wonder how those companies can service their debt. Their turnover is unlikely to rise by more than inflation in years ahead, they have very little chance of expansion and a better chance that the three per cent decline in public transport will continue. Yet they are paying around half of their turnover for the initial purchase price. I feel those companies, certainly as stand-alone companies, could be very fragile if interest rates go up.”

But he insists his interest in Strathtay is strictly long term and is happy to squash a Scottish-based rumour that there is a secret agreement with Stagecoach to swap Strathtay for East Midland Motor Services after a decent interval and give each group a company nearer its centre of operations. “We’re not in the marketplace to bid for other people and I don’t think that Brian Souter would want to swap East Midland, anyway. It’s fair to say, also, that I was into the last tranche of bids for another company which was of no interest to Brian Souter.”

Distance, he adds, is no object to running a successful group of companies. He professes complete faith in managing/finance director Charlie Mullen and the others in the team he inherited at Strathtay, all of whom had to adjust to the initial disappointment of being beaten in their bid to buy the company.

The Yorkshire Traction style is to agree corporate plans, budgets, cash flows and out-turns annually with subsidiaries, then to leave the companies to achieve those objectives. “There is no point in having an MD at Strathtay if I’m going to be the MD,” says Carter. “They have no need to come to me for decision. If you are going to put a group together, I see no other way of running it.

“I shall be in Lincoln tomorrow, but that’s because I go most Tuesdays. I may only spend an hour with them and almost certainly my meeting with Paul Hill won’t be structured. And I may call at two Yorkshire Traction depots on my way back.”

He sees his role in two parts. He is the senior day-to-day manager at Yorkshire Traction, determining such policies as rigorous customer care training programmes, and, as chairman, he lays down group policy. “I am the person there to “Our policy is to dispose of hulks and not major units. I don’t see why we should put a ready made tool available to a competitor at a price less than we have to depreciate the replacement vehicle. If you do that, you either put yourself into a disadvantageous bounce ideas off, if they wish to, and the person to pull it all together and see that we have a common philosophy in business. I see myself as a motivator for the group.”

A large chunk of group profit is being ploughed into fleet renewal. “We only need to please ourselves and I believe there is no great requirement at the company to pull massive sums out of the business,” says Carter. “It allows you to give good investment policies and it means if you hit hard times and have to cut back, you can live off the fat for a while.”

Companies can borrow vehicles from one another and use the Barnsley central works for major repair work. Carter says there also is a substantial benefit in reduced stock holdings of major units. And this is enhanced by the group’s policy of never selling complete surplus buses either to other operators or to scrap dealers.

position or you put your competitor into an advantageous position.

“And it makes a lot of sense salvaging major units now when vehicle purchasing is very low and manufacturers are bound to have to pass a good deal more of their overhead costs on to spare parts production.”

So what does the future look like for Carter and his burgeoning bus group? He is constantly on the lookout for other business opportunities to capitalise on. And not just bus companies. Commercial confidentiality stops him revealing details of a new unrelated venture the group has just got into, but he does admit to a few which nearly made it into the group. He looked seriously at a carpet warehouse, two haulage companies and retail outlets. “We will look at anything if we feel it has a future for us,” he says.

Maintaining Standards

Is it better to buy new and rely on manufacturers' back-up or spend less on older vehicles which need more constant attention? Alan Millar finds out the experiences of operators which do both.

It is one of the most critical decisions in the coach and bus business. Do you commit your capital and future earnings to expensive new vehicles or do you buy older vehicles, accept they may break down, and spend more on preventive maintenance and spare vehicles?

There is no universal answer. You do what you feel is best for the work you do and manage your fleet to get the best out of it.

The Kings Ferry proprietor Peter O'Neill, running 60 coaches on Kent-London commuter services and a busy private hire programme, operates mainly new vehicles. His oldest single-deckers are three years old, double-deckers up to seven years old. The fleet is a mix of Volvo, DAF/Bova, Mercedes-Benz, Scania and Dennis, all selected with as much of an eye to the way they will be maintained as to whether they can do the job.

Those considerations are weighing heavily on his mind as he decides whether to buy Scania or Dennis coaches this year.

He wants to be certain the manufacturer's local dealer understands The Kings Ferry's needs and that it can fit in with the service back-up his own staff provide. Three of his 17 engineers work from 6pm to 1.30am on routine maintenance; two others, an auto electrician and a diesel engineer, take service vans to London every day to rectify minor faults like defective light bulbs while the commuter coaches are parked for the day.

"At night, when they are doing re-lines and replacing clutches, they often need major parts and we want to be able to get them." He expects 24-hour service from dealers' parts departments and, for regularly replaced parts, like brake shoes, clutches, alternators and some valves and brackets, the company pushes manufacturers to put an imprest stock into its stores.

"As we use those parts, we inform them and they replace them and invoice us. They also check our stock monthly to make sure it's what we say it is and sometimes they will come to us for a part if they need one at night," says Mr O'Neill.

Those requirements help explain why he prefers to buy coaches from major truck manufacturers and with as little complication as possible. The back-up on his first Dennis Javelins is as much on trial as the coaches themselves.

Warranty cover is important, but Mr O'Neill tries to have it on his own terms. "We want to do the majority of the work ourselves, and in exchange for not charging us for labour, we want an exchange part. Some manufacturers are only prepared to do that if they do the work." That can mean lost earnings as dealers cannot turn the vehicle round so quickly.

Volvo only charges for replacement parts if it finds they were not faulty, but others invoice first and credit later. "With Mercedes, we found it was taking three months to go through the system. For a rogue vehicle, you could get a £2,000 invoice in March, be chased for payment at the end of April and then wait until May or June to get a credit. That affects cash flow." He has persuaded Mercedes to relax this policy for his fleet.

With such a large, intensively used fleet, The Kings Ferry can predict when some parts need to be replaced. Commuter work wears out clutches and Mr O'Neill likes to have some sort of tell-tale, a viewing hole, so clutch wear can be checked without stripping it down. "On our DAFs, there is no way of measuring it till it starts slipping and that is 20 miles before it fails. If you strip it down, Sod's law is that it won't be worn."

In the West Midlands, expansion of local bus work has prompted Patterson's Coaches of Selly Oak to expand its maintenance back-up. It started running additional contracts for Centro (West Midlands PTE) on December 4 and soon found its daytime servicing arrangements - ideal for its coaches - were inadequate.

Until then, it had three Mercedes midibuses, one of them kept as a spare, but partner Dave Patterson says he could not justify more spare vehicles when the services were increased. Now, he employs night and Sunday shifts of mechanics to check each bus nightly, to carry out a weekly grease inspection and a major service every third week. Drivers' defect reports are essential too.

The Mercedes are covered by three-year driveline warranties and any warranty work is handled by the local dealer.

Mr Patterson has invested in workshop equipment, including column lifts and a rolling road, to assist with inspections and he believes in carrying comprehensive spares stocks. "We hold brake and clutch parts and hold everything for every vehicle in the fleet. I feel it is far better for us to hold them ourselves because a lot of things happen at 6pm when we may not be able to get the parts." His stocks include two reconditioned ZF gearboxes, so a defective unit can be replaced.

Hector Boon (far right) believes his drivers play a vital role in managing his fleet of high specification coaches.

Peter O'Neill: his oldest coach is three years old and he runs 60 vehicles.

Mr Patterson also operates 16 Leyland Cub welfare buses on local authority contracts. Distances are short, but stop/start operation causes clutch and brake wear.

Those buses also have tail-lifts and, here again, the company prefers to replace complete units rather than try and repair on the vehicle. Dave Patterson bought 24 lifts from the Carlyle receiver last year, in anticipation of winning a tender which ended up going to someone else. He has sold some since, but intends to keep others as spares.

Hector Boon of Boon's Coaches at Boreham, near Chelmsford, believes his drivers play a vital role in managing his fleet of five high specification coaches and five Atlantean double-deck school buses.

They are expected to report defects, all of which are rectified in-house, but they also have a maintenance responsibility when they report for work. "No vehicle is started up here in the morning until the oil and water has been checked, even if the vehicle has not been out the previous day, they must look at it. In my view, it is a crime not to do that.

"And the biggest crime of all is to run out of fuel. The driver is responsible for oil, water and fuel. I don't care if the vehicle has only gone out on an eight-mile round trip to Chelmsford, it should always be topped up on its return. That way if we do run out of fuel, the buses can still run."

He believes that is the main reason why his 15-year-old Atlanteans are still in good condition. He keeps one as a spare and three of the others only do 40 miles a day; the fifth does a bingo contract which takes it up to 100 miles. They are inspected weekly, but he relies on the drivers for defect reports. "They know I get very cross if I get in a vehicle and find something is not right."

Richard Holladay admits he probably over-maintains his nine-vehicle fleet. But Red Bus Services, based as Clyst Honiton near Exeter, relies almost exclusively on secondhand service buses for tendered routes and he believes his system guards against lost mileage and major failures.

He runs three Bristol VRTs, three Alexander-bodied Seddon Pennine 7s, a Duple-bodied Leopard coach for private hires, a 34-year-old Albion Nimbus midibus and a new Mercedes midibus bought for a five-year contract which demanded a bus under seven years old. The fleet covers about 280,000km on local services.

Holladay has adapted a National Bus time-based maintenance programme to meet his needs. Three-weekly safety checks cover brakes, steering, transmission as well as lights and seats, but on every alternate inspection they are also given a 100-item minor service. Eighteen-weekly major services involve oil and filter changes.

Six of the buses have Gardner engines and parts are available from a local agent. Parts for VRs are available from Volvo and from a Plymouth-based specialist. Most Seddon parts, including clutches and brake linings which tend to fail most often, come from local parts factors.

In his experience, the trick of running older buses is to buy wisely - avoiding those likely to have worked over heavily salted roads - and to sell them when they start to wear out. He sold some ex-NBC Bristol LHs, bought for between £1,500 and £2,200, once their bodies became damaged and their gearboxes and back axles began to wear out. "We could have spent £5,000 or £6,000 refurbishing them, but we had the best years out of vehicles which had far exceeded their design lives."

The Seddons replaced Bristol REs whose aluminium bodes had begun to shake apart and suffer from perished window rubbers. By contrast, chassis corrosion is more likely to dictate when the VRs are sold.

"We will have to continue with used vehicles," he says, "because they offer value for money, but I do worry about where we're going to get them in four of five years' time. We might have to consider rebodding then."

PORTSDOWN URBAN BUS

The Portsdown Urban Bus, a low-floor Midibus for the Dennis Dart and Volvo B6R chassis from Wadham Stringer, with capacities from 33-43 seats plus up to 17 standees.

The lightweight all welded steel framed body with full corrosion protection is vertically panelled in aluminium with separate lower panels. Customer preference and traditional values are also provided in the two-piece double curved windscreen and rubber glazed windows. New technology, too, is built in with the latest standards of destination equipment and DIPTAC facilities covering handrails, lighting, signalling and flooring arrangement.

An appealing package for Operator and traveller alike, the Portsdown Bus is available at 8.5m, 9.0m and 10.0m lengths.

Commissioner waits for magistrates ruling

A disciplinary inquiry has been adjourned against Gordon's Coaches of Rowley Regis until pending prosecutions are heard against them.

West Midlands traffic commissioner, John Mervyn Pugh, adjourning an inquiry for a month, said he would have to wait until magistrates had heard a case against Mary and Christopher Millership.

The Millerships have been summonsed over tachograph and licensing offences, plus the use of unlicensed drivers.

Mr Pugh said he had been considering taking action against the Millership's licence following an unsatisfactory maintenance report from the Department of Transport's Vehicle Inspectorate, together with an application by the partners to increase the licence authorisation from four to six vehicles.

But Mr Pugh said he could not make a decision until after the magistrates hearing and he was not prepared to grant any additional vehicles at the present time.

told the Birmingham public inquiry that the partnership had been formed for commercial reasons.

The two transport managers nominated were Gordon Millership and Celia Hadley. The firm had been in business for five years and owned six vehicles.

Conceding there was a schedule of vehicles prohibition notices, Mr Carless said that since "Serious brake defects were found on all the firm's coaches during a fleet check in October"

Christmas, however, the Millerships had had letters from the Vehicle Inspectorate, saying it was pleased the firm had taken advice given.

He said there was now a system of six weekly inspections, a flow chart and nil daily defect reporting by drivers.

had a mechanic in whom they had confidence and the vehicles were now road tested by Mr Millership.

A particular problem in the past, said Mr Carless, had concerned two mechanics who had let them down.

During a fleet check last March, vehicle examiners had found neglect. It transpired the records were not being kept as they should have been and that inspections were not being carried out properly.

The mechanic employed at that time was dismissed. But a new mechanic did not keep the inspection records properly either. He was subsequently dismissed for a number of reasons, including deception over a driving licence.

Serious brake defects were found on all the firm's coaches during a fleet check in October, said Mr Carless. It seemed someone had deliberately introduced oil into the brake drums.

Sabotage was suggested as it was the same wheel on each coach, and in one case the system was an air system. Other defects found were only of an advisory nature.

The Millerships also ran a lorry business and employed a mechanic and two assistants. They had got their act together between March and October and, but for the introduction of oil into the braking systems of the vehicles, there would have been a satisfactory report.

Asked by Mr Pugh whether there was anything else he ought to be told, Mr Carless said there were summonses due to be heard before Oldbury magistrates against Mary and Christopher Millerships for various tachograph and licensing offences, plus the use of unlicensed drivers.

YOUR WEEKLY REPORT ON LAW AND THE COACH AND BUS OPERATOR BY MICHAEL JEWELL

Adjourning the hearing for a month, Mr Pugh suggested that between now and the next hearing, the partners should put each and every vehicle through an MoT test and that they give serious consideration to reducing the period between inspections from six weeks.

"The partners should put each and every vehicle through an MoT test"

The system of maintenance that the Millerships had put into effect would only work satisfactorily if the vehicles were in A1 condition to start with, he said.

If, when the hearing was resumed, the news from the magistrates court was not too damning, all the vehicles had passed an MoT test, and there were no further prohibition notices, he could be persuaded to look favourably on the increased vehicle authorisation.

John Mervyn Pugh issues suspension threat for Price Travel

The six-vehicle licence held by David Price, trading as Price Travel of Wolverhampton, came close to suspension, traffic commissioner, John Mervyn Pugh, told a public inquiry.

Mr Mervyn Pugh had considered suspending the licence until the vehicles had each passed a further MoT test.

Mr Mervyn Pugh said that the maintenance system Mr Price had been advised to take on depended on the vehicles being in A1 condition to begin with. If they were not, it was likely that they would attract prohibition notices.

He had been considering suspending the licence in the meantime, but had decided against it as he was confident Mr Price would quickly get his vehicles through.

He said he would like Mr Price to attend a New Operator's seminar, adding: 'The whole object is to keep you in business. I take no pleasure in putting people out of business. If I can keep you operating, I will.'

Four fined at Hendersons

Crewe based Hendersons Coaches have been fined for drivers' hours and tachograph offences on international journeys.

The infringements cost Beverley and Gerald Henderson and two of their drivers £1,560 in fines and costs at Crew Magistrates Court.

The Hendersons were each fined £380, and ordered to pay £100 prosecution costs, after pleading guilty to one offence of failing to produce a tachograph chart.

The drivers Peter Bramhall and Kevin Jones, each pleaded guilty to two offences of taking insufficient daily rest. They were each fined £240 and ordered to pay £60 towards the cost of the prosecution.

Prosecuting for the Department of Transport, Gordon Cowans, said the offences were revealed by an analysis of the tachograph charts on double manned journey of some 735 miles in June.

When he asked for the chart for the second driver, Mr Henderson had said he could not find it or recall the driver's name.

Mr Bramhall and Mr Jones had been the drivers on two journeys in June; one between Nemes and Hull, and the other between Lugano and Crewe. On each occasion both men had failed to take eight hours rest in a 30-hour period.

When interviewed, they had said that they did not realise they were doing wrong.

Mrs Henderson said that they still had not been able to find the missing chart. They had moved offices in June and it might have got lost.

On her CPC examination course she was told that a driver must not remove the tachograph while he was on duty, and she had instructed the drivers accordingly.

The notes said that a driver could depart from the hours limits to enable him to reach a suitable stopping place to the extent of ensuring the safety of the vehicle or of its passengers.

If the drivers were held up by roadworks or by ferry delays in the summer, they got behind. If they stopped it meant they had to take eight hours off with the passengers on the roadside, so they had to keep going to meet the third driver who took over in Lugano.

She now understood from the traffic examiner that the chart should be endorsed on the back when that happened, though she still did not feel that it was right to remove the chart from the tachograph.

Mr Jones had joined the firm in May, said Mrs Henderson. He was a diesel fitter by trade but wanted to drive.

She had explained the regulations to him. The ferries were very busy in June and often delayed. She thought that on one of the occasions the coach had also had a puncture.

In reply to the magistrates, Mrs Henderson said that the firm had been established two years.

In a letter to the court, Mr Jones said he had wanted to gain experience in the coach industry. He had not fully understood that a 10-minute break did not count as rest.

Mr Bramhall wrote to say that they had experienced hold ups on the journeys concerned.

He was not aware that he could open the tachograph and record the hold ups on the chart.

Harris Coaches (Summercourt) has vehicle authorisation slashed

Western traffic commissioner, Air Vice Marshall Ronald Ashford, has cut the licence authorisation of Newquay-based Harris Coaches (Summercourt) from ten to six vehicles.

Censoring the company, at a Truro public inquiry, for inadequate maintenance and inspection, and a failure to keep proper records, Air Vice Marshall Ashford ordered the company to carry out four weekly inspections.

Department of Transport vehicle examiner, Brian Halling, said that until last Spring the fleet had generally been in good order.

However, by the end of the Summer there was evidence of a lack of routine maintenance.

Drivers' defect books had not, with one exception, been filled in and the inspection records were incomplete or not of the required frequency. He had some doubts about the competence of the fitters, their interest in the job and the time allowed for maintenance and repairs.

For the company, Martin

Harris Coaches (Summercourt): licence cut from ten to six vehicles

Evans said the fleet had been reduced from ten vehicles to six. That would have the immediate effect of reducing the pressure on those responsible for inspection and maintenance.

The company had dismissed two inexperienced fitters who had done the day-to-day work last Summer, and had engaged an experienced fitter who now supervised the workshop.

Director and transport manager, Wayne Harris, who was ultimately responsible, would, in future, assist when needed.

He stressed that when prohibition notices had been received, the defects had been dealt with immediately. He claimed that the majority of defects related to 'cosmetic matters', rather than to substantial mechanical faults.

Air Vice Marshall Ashford pointed out that of ten prohibition notices, five were immediate ones, issued only when it was considered that a vehicle was unsafe. That represented more than 15 per cent of the vehicles examined and must be worrying for members of the public.

Mr Evans said that the lack of inspection records did not mean the inspections hadn't been carried out. Some documentation could have been lost when the company's premises were flooded last April.

He accepted this was no excuse for the lack of records after April. Some of the records had been kept, but were illegible or not filed and not available to the vehicle examiner.

Air Vice Marshall Ashford said the company had enjoyed, apart from one slight matter in 1983, a good record for many years and there was no criticism of it until 1989.

'But, over the last year, it has clearly failed', he said. 'Records were incomplete, the standard of inspection deplorable, and too many prohibition notices collected,' he added.

The company bore a heavy responsibility to the public and had slipped badly since last Summer, even though it had recognised its faults and had put in remedial measures.

'I am simply the guardian of public safety and the public has a right to know the vehicles they get on are safe and secure,' he said.

He warned that, unless the company put its house in order, its licence would be at risk. While any operator was entitled to one warning, if there was not a consistent and marked improvement, he would be failing in his duty if he allowed the operator to continue operating unsafe vehicles.

COACH TOURS & EXCURSIONS

UK coaches fail to meet customer's luxury needs

11 veterans holidaying in East Anglia will be ferried around in coaches mainly brought in from Belgium.

And the reason is that the exacting needs of the US market just can't be met by UK operators, claims the boss of Tours International, Ralph Bennett.

The company, known to operators for its tour wholesaling, has just landed the ground handling for 20,000 of the former US Air Force personnel and partners for their 50th reunion celebrations.

"They need air-conditioned coaches," said Mr Bennett. "I couldn't find enough in the UK. Frankly, it's not just about the availability. It's also about price. Even if I ran empty Belgian coaches across the Channel, in many cases I could save money."

Mr Bennett warns that the European market is far more demanding than the UK, but that the British coaching public is becoming more sophisticated.

He believes that the UK public will follow suit if the highly-equipped coaches from Germany and elsewhere begin trading in Britain. He says there is a danger that many British operators will be left behind in the rush for higher standards of coach travel.

"I know European operators already looking at basing themselves in England. They are going to come over here with their quality coaches and cream off the best business," he warns.

"If you've ever sat in London in traffic, you'll know that forced-air ventilation doesn't work when you're standing still. Once you've enjoyed air-conditioning, you don't want to go back.

"If you talked to operators five or 10 years ago, the idea of coffee machines and a toilet in the coach, the answer was 'What do I want that for?'"

"Now, a high percentage have them because the consumer demands them."

Mr Bennett says the same demands are being placed on tour wholesaling. En suite facilities are now essential, not optional, he says.

"The consumer has become more demanding because media coverage of destinations and service has increased."

The short break market has grown at a phenomenal rate, says Mr Bennett, whose wholesaling has doubled in 1992 over the 'awful' 1991 season.

He says the next big market will be for Eastern Europe.

"Some countries are still not switched on to a huge influx of tourists but they are getting there. The Dutch and Belgians have been out there all Summer."

Tourism cash boost for Wales

Millions of pounds is being spent to raise the profile of Wales as a holiday destination for higher spenders.

Over the next three years the Welsh Tourist Board is spending £7.5 million on a marketing campaign to boost tourism.

This follows the Secretary of State's announcement in December that the board's budget for 1992/93 is to be increased by £2.5 million. The extra cash will enable the WTB to launch its first image building campaign for more than five years.

The initiative is aimed at attracting new, higher spending visitors and extending the tourist season each side of the peak months of July and August.

It will highlight the accessibility of Wales, the quality and variety of the tourism industry and the Welsh welcome.

The main elements of the push will be television advertising and advertising in specialist magazines - like fishing journals - and a sheet poster campaign at key sites in the North West.

Coach operators should benefit from the initiative as the image and profile of Wales is heightened.

It's business as usual at troubled Windsor

It's business as usual at Windsor Safari Park which has been dragged into receivership.

Fears that tours could be disrupted are groundless following assurances by Chris Barlow of receivers, Cork Gully that the Park will be open this summer.

"Windsor Safari Park is a unique asset and we are in no rush to sell until the right buyer is found. Visitors can rest assured there will be no interruption in service," said Mr Barlow.

R&E operators' incentive scheme

Windsor's popular Royalty & Empire exhibition has come up with a novel commission payment scheme for coach operators.

Commission is based on the number of people a coach operator brings to the attraction. Royalty & Empire are not releasing figures, but the percentage payable as commission increases in increments over and above 250 visitors. The commission is payable in one lump sum at the end of a year.

Royalty & Empire general manager, Sarah Mansfield, told Coach & Bus Week that she was currently receiving enquiries about the commission scheme from coach operators: "Quite a few have put themselves down for the scheme."

Introduction of the scheme ties in neatly with the opening of Royalty & Empire's new exhibition celebrating 40 years of the Queen's reign. Ms Mansfield said the new exhibition had got off to a flying start with groups. It had attracted over 2,500 group visitors in the first two weeks of being open.

Admission prices for groups of over 20 to Royalty & Empire, including the new Queen Elizabeth II exhibition, are £3.30 per adult, £2.30 senior citizen and £2.20 child.

☎ More details from Sarah Mansfield on 0753 857837.

Three major maritime attractions are to launch an enticing incentive for coach drivers at this year's British Travel Trade Fair.

The three maritime attractions are the Mary Rose and HMS Victory in Portsmouth; the Historic Dockyard in Chatham and Historic Maritime Greenwich. They are now marketing themselves collectively as The Great Maritime Collection.

To mark the association, the attractions are offering a bottle of rum free to the driver - providing he has taken at least 10 people to each of the three attractions.

The Great Maritime Collection will be launched with a special nautical music performance on April 1 at stand 270 at the BTTF.

☎ More information on the incentive scheme is available from Sue Hudson at the Historic Dockyard, Chatham on 0634 812551 or Sallyann Baldry at The Mary Rose Trust on 0705 750521.

Tourists put in picture

A giant replica plate camera over 22 feet high will be putting visitors to Garden Festival Wales in the picture about the tourist attractions of the region.

The camera will form the entrance to the Escape to Our Beautiful Landscapes pavilion at Ebbw Vale. After passing through the camera's video show, visitors will see picture postcards come to life. A host of moving animals, birds and robots - including a lifelike David Bellamy - are set in landscapes that will include a beach, seaside pier, forests and waterfall, Harlech Castle, a slate mine, spectacular rocks and a village street.

Visitors will also be able to smell the attractions of Wales through a special 'smellorama' system.

The pavilion has been designed and coordinated by the Development Board for Rural Wales in association with the Wales Tourist Board. Six local authorities are also contributing.

☎ More details about Garden Festival Wales on 0495 350198.

Wendy Collins of Drewery Coach Hire was the lucky winner of a brand new video camera in Thorpe Park's free draw held during the recent Excursions show at Wembley.

Shown here receiving the prize from Thorpe Park's group sales manager, Derek Oliver, Wendy is both a community nurse and a tour driver with Drewery. She has been driving the Volvo Paramount shown here for the past three years on European and UK tours and private hire.

'I am delighted to have won,' Wendy said. 'The prize will be used to record details of tours and trips, in order to encourage potential clients to use our services in the future.'

Wendy's win made it a double celebration for Drewery, which is celebrating its 21st anniversary this year.

Rooms in Reading

Reading University has entered into the group accommodation market and is offering operators rooms during peak season for £19.50 inclusive per person per night.

The university has recently completed 149 bedrooms, each with en suite shower room at Bulmershe Court. Surrounded by woodlands, Bulmershe Court is situated at Early in the heart of the Thames Valley, close to London, Windsor, Oxford and Henley.

Gill Silvester of Reading University told Coach and Bus Week that the situation would be the main attraction to coach operators: 'Windsor Castle and Safari Park, Henley Regatta and the Berkshire downs for Newbury and the racecourse are all nearby. And our proximity to central London (41 miles) makes Bulmershe Court an excellent out of London stop for groups visiting a show or going to the theatre.'

The rooms have been designed to serve a dual purpose. With a fully equipped kitchen, they will accommodate up to six people self catering as holiday flats. They will also serve overnight parties or coach parties with the inclusion of breakfast and dinner. The supplement for dinner is £7.00 per head.

One hundred single rooms will be available to book from July 18 to September 5.

☎ Full details from Gill Silvester on 0734 318334.

When the price is no barrier

Prices will not be a barrier at The Thames Barrier visitor centre since they are being pegged at last year's levels.

Furthermore the site has been improved with a picnic area and a new children's play area this year.

adults £1.80 and £1.10 for concessions, now estimates that the attraction should be itinerised for a one-and-a-half hour stop.

Operators who have not seen the barrier may be surprised at its scale. Each of the tide gates which protect London from freak high tides are five storeys high. The project took eight years to complete and used half a million tonnes of concrete.

Thames Barrier makes an ideal lunch stop for parties heading into London via the south-east ferryports. It's just off the end of the A102M, signposted off the A206 Woolwich Road. It's within striking distance of the Greenwich Maritime Museum and the Cutty Sark.

The Thames Barrier Function Room can be booked for lunches or the Buffet room can be used.

Alternatively, dinner can be arranged in the Buffet - which offers views of the floodlit barrier. Boat cruises can also be organised. Coach parking is free and there is a discount for drivers' meals.

Full details of Thames Barrier group meals and admission rates are available from the visitor centre on 081 854 1373. Barrier cruise details are available on 081 854 5555.

A touch of the tropics in Stockton-on-Tees

Europe's biggest hothouse for tropical butterflies is soon to be opened at Preston Park - a popular destination for coach operators.

In late May this year visitors to the Stockton-on-Tees venue will be able to visit 'Butterfly World' - a £250,000 development set within the 117 acres of Preston Park. The attraction is a joint development between butterfly expert, Gareth Welsh; Cleveland Action Team and the owner of the park, Stockton Council.

Butterfly World will incorporate Europe's largest enclosed flight area for tropical butterflies.

A new 120ft by 90ft hothouse will be linked later this year to a reception area reconstructed from Stockton's award-winning pavilion from the Gateshead Garden Festival.

Stockton's mayor, Councillor Michael O'Brien, set the construction work on the steel and glass structure in motion when he cut the first sod of earth in a special ceremony last week.

Stockton's leisure and tourism officer, John Warbrook, said: 'The centre is set to become important not just with visitors, but also as a breeding ground for hundreds of endangered species.'

Walsall's recession beater

Despite the recession, Walsall Leather Museum got a seven percent increase in visitor numbers last year. But coach operator visits were in the minority.

The West Midlands attraction pulled 27,500 through the door in 1991, including a large number attending its nine-day leather festival and 20 other special activity days. School visits doubled in a year.

But despite visits to the attraction being free, coach operator-organised visits were few and far between.

Of just over 4,000 group visitors, around 3,700 had organised themselves and only 286 visitors had used the museum after prompting from operators.

Yet the centre is very close to Merry Hill and other popular coach destinations.

"The last year has been a difficult one for most visitor attractions in the region.

"Despite this, the Leather Centre has seen real growth and this has enabled us to plan for 1992 with confidence," said museum curator, Mike Glasson.

Further details of the Leather Centre and this year's events are now available on 0922 721153.

More meals per mile

There'll be more motorway service areas throughout the UK if Government plans are given the green light.

Secretary of State for Transport, Malcolm Rifkind (right), has told the House of Commons that legislation is to be brought in which would allow one service area every 10 miles instead of every 30.

He also revealed that the Government was proposing to sell off the 44 existing sites to their operators and let the private sector choose sites for service areas.

Rifkind: Allowing more service stations

Transport fixes a site and puts a 50-year lease out to tender. The new proposals have been put out to consultation which will end on March 20.

Sunday opening in theatreland

Never on a Sunday? Well if two pilot schemes prove successful West End theatres may well soon be opening on the Sabbath.

Theatre chiefs are watching with interest the reaction to the decision by the Cambridge Theatre and the Albery Theatre to abandon the tradition of closing on Sunday and shut up shop the following day instead - Monday being a quiet day.

Sally Ferries has reported a two per cent increase in coach traffic between Ramsgate and Dunkerque during 1991. The ferry operator carried a total of 16,230 coaches last year, a modest 350 more than in 1990. However, it is enjoying a good start to 1992. Current coach bookings are up 36 per cent on this time last year.

'The market in general has picked up quite considerably in the last month and we are currently booking strongly on all fronts,' said Sally's UK sales manager, Roger Simister.

Time gallery to open soon

A new gallery devoted to time will open at Sir Christopher Wren's Old Royal Observatory later this month.

The official opening at the observatory, the home of Greenwich Mean Time and centre of the world's time zones, will be on February 28 - just hours before Leap Year's Day. The gallery will be opened by 'Tim' (Brian Cobby), the infamous voice of the British Telecom speaking clock.

Visitors to the gallery will discover why there are 60 seconds in a minute and 24 hours in a day. The history of timekeeping will be told - from the earliest hourglasses and astrolabes to the latest Swatch watch - using a large selection of the unique and valuable scientific instruments from the observatory's world-famous collection.

The Old Royal Observatory is currently undergoing restoration and refurbishment work following an award of £245,000 from the Museum and Galleries Improvement Fund. The Octagon Room, one of the most historically significant rooms in the country, will reopen in the spring.

More details from the National Maritime Museum on 081 858 4422.

P&O Prides refitted and refurbished

Dover's two biggest superferries - the sister ships Pride of Dover and Pride of Calais - returned to work last week after annual refits and refurbishments costing £3million.

During refit in Falmouth the two P&O ships were also extensively upgraded as part of a company-wide spend of more than £15million. Improvements made included:

- New open plan information areas where multi-lingual receptionists can provide travellers with wide ranging information and advice.

- New self service gift shops offering a selection of newspapers, sweets, toys and last minute shopping items.

- Redecorated self service restaurants with extra seating.

The third P&O ship on the Dover-Calais route, the Pride of Bruges, now also has a waiter assisted carvery in addition to its self service restaurant. P&O says the carvery is proving to be a great success.

Meanwhile work is progressing in Sicily on the £20million project to lengthen and totally refurbish the fourth P&O vessel for the route, Pride of Kent. The ship is due to return to Dover in May with a capacity for 1,800 passengers and 475 cars - less than Pride of Calais and the Pride of Dover's capacity of 2,290 passengers and 650 cars, but still in the superferry class.

On board facilities on Pride of Kent will include Club Class and a la carte restaurant.

Details of P&O ferry crossings on 0304 223833.

Britain's Top Ten

Five of Britain's major industrial cities are now among the most popular city break destinations, according to figures just released by Goldenrail, the ex-BR shortbreak and holiday operator.

The company's 1991 Top Ten Cities has been compiled from the 150,000 people who travelled with Goldenrail last year. It is:

- | | |
|---------------|---------------|
| 1. London | 6. Liverpool |
| 2. York | 7. Bath |
| 3. Edinburgh | 8. Plymouth |
| 4. Glasgow | 9. Portsmouth |
| 5. Manchester | 10. Newcastle |

Nick Cust, Goldenrail's joint managing director, said: 'Not only are people interested in Britain's industrial heritage, but also these cities have really worked hard to promote themselves and develop attractions for tourists, from reclaimed docklands to themed museums.'

NW Workshop

Coach operators and group organisers are being offered free entry to the North West Tourist Board's 1992 Heritage Education Workshop.

More than 70 top regional attractions will be gathered together at Haydock Racecourse for the workshop on Saturday, March 7. Historic houses, gardens, heritage and craft centres, museums and art galleries will all be represented.

Dorothy Naylor, chief executive of the North West Tourist Board, said: 'This is the ideal way for coach operators and anyone who plans group visits to see the breadth of attractions on offer and talk to the managers in person. Everything is under one roof and there is plenty of opportunity to talk to the exhibitors and discuss individual requirements in an enjoyable setting.'

Contact Nick Brook-Sykes at the North West Tourist Board on 0942 821222.

UTTOXETER

UTTOXETER RACECOURSE 1992

CLUB £9.00
TATTERSALLS £6.00
SILVER RING £3.00

THE COURSE, an oval of approximately a mile-and-a-quarter, is essentially of a galloping nature, although there are minor undulations, the paddock bend is tight and the back stretch has slight bends. There are eight fences with a run-in of about 170 yards. Races of two miles, three-and-a-quarter miles and four-and-a-half miles are started on a spur on the last bend. There are excellent all-weather viewing facilities in all enclosures.

The highlight of the racing season at Uttoxeter is the £35,000 added Ansells National, which is run this year on Saturday, 14th March. £100,000 prize money will be on offer at this meeting.

All coaches are well maintained in our own workshop and are complete with full maintenance records.

Talk nicely to me and I can arrange finance painting or even haggle on price; you never know.

I am looking for some 1990/1991 coaches in good condition, especially double deckers. I would consider a reverse part exchange or straight purchase.

PRIVATE HIRE ASSISTANT

London Coaches is the capital's largest specialist coach and sightseeing tour operator. We currently have a vacancy for a Private Hire Assistant.

You will report to the Private Hire Manager and be responsible for dealing with the growing demand for private hires and contract work.

This involves selling private charter operations to prospective customers, and dealing with relevant correspondence and all documentation, which will include finalising all arrangements when bookings are confirmed, negotiating the supply of additional vehicles when necessary.

In an increasingly competitive environment, this demanding post requires a good knowledge of the coaching industry and also of the geography of Greater London, the U.K. and their tourist attractions. Organisation skills, a good telephone manner and the ability to work under pressure are essential.

Salary: Subject to experience and qualifications.

GENERAL MANAGER

■ Following another highly successful year in a tough market, this established and profitable transport services organisation now has some impressive investment plans both within and beyond the current coach and bus operations. A new Leisure Travel Division will play a major part in the Group's continuing growth and development.

■ As General Manager of the new division, you will bring together existing business units and, within the overall strategic framework, carry out a comprehensive review; formulate a broad-ranging business plan; and, with Board agreement, manage its implementation to achieve volume and profit targets.

■ Probably aged between 35 and 45, you will be occupying a general management position in the travel industry, preferably in coaches/buses, and involving responsibility for operations, business planning and development. Commercially aware, numerate, and with sound people-management skills, you should combine initiative and determination with flexibility and sensitivity. In an expanding Group, further career opportunities will complement the immediate challenges and rewards.

■ Please send your CV to: Stan Dickinson, Theaker Monro & Newman, Suite 2A, Josephs Well, Park Lane, Leeds, LS3 1AB (0532 420129) quoting ref: 1075

RECRUITMENT & PERSONNEL
CONSULTANTS

Freeman strengthens Badger's Rapid Transit

James Freeman, managing director of Badgerline's Rapid Transit subsidiary, has taken on two senior managers to strengthen his bid to promote the innovative Belgian Guided Light Transit system in Bristol and Avon.

The two men will join the project management team of the consultancy group already formed by Badgerline Rapid Transit to take GLT through to submission of a Parliamentary bill. They are Bill Wyley, who joins from consulting engineers, Kennedy Henderson, and Tim Smith of Transportation Planning Associates. Mr Wyley has been appointed GLT project manager and Mr Smith his deputy. They both report to project director, James Freeman.

"They bring a great deal of valuable experience and expertise to our team developing guided Light Transit in Bristol and Avon," said Mr Freeman. "Together with the other members of our consultancy team, they will be responsible for developing the proposal and depositing of a bill in Parliament this coming November."

Mr Wyley, an MA from Cambridge, is a Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers and a Fellow of the Institute of Highways and Transportation.

He was appointed deputy managing director of Kennedy Henderson, principal engineering consultants to GLT, just last month. He has a total of 24 years' experience as a civil engineer, more latterly specializing in transport planning.

Mr Smith, a B Sc in civil engineering from Glasgow University and an M Sc in Transport from Imperial College, is a Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers and the Chartered Institute of Transport. A chartered civil engineer, he has been with TPA for four years and has more than 20 years experience in civil engineering in the UK and overseas.

Apprentice of the year

For the second year running, Jamie Smith, an apprentice fitter at the Milehouse depot of Plymouth Citybus, has been voted the best student on the final year motor vehicle BTEC course at the Plymouth College of Further Education.

He was awarded a trophy and socket set for his efforts. Last year he won a cup and a cash prize. Citybus directors awarded Jamie, 19, a further £50 as a result of his continuing success.

Jamie is one of seven apprentices employed by Plymouth Citybus. Now in his last year of apprenticeship he is enrolled on a management course.

Promotion for Everton Fan

Paul Hughes

Merseyside Transport has promoted former customer services manager, Paul Hughes, to the post of production manager of its recently launched subsidiary MTL Engineering.

Mr Hughes, 38, who lives in Huyton, Liverpool, will oversee refurbishment work carried out at the company's Edge Lane workshops on both Merseybus vehicles and on contracts awarded by other bus and coach operators, including the well-publicized London Buses Routemaster refurbishment contract.

Mr Hughes joined the PTE operator in 1972 as a wages clerk before moving into engineering, where he was later to gain experience as an industrial engineer, senior production engineer and commercial engineering officer.

He is married and is an Everton supporter.

New prof for PCL

Peter Jones is to take up the appointment of professor and director of the Transport Studies Group within the School of Urban Development and Planning at the Polytechnic of Central London.

He is currently deputy director of the Transport Studies Unit at Oxford University, but has been involved with the PCL Transport Studies Group on a part time basis since December 1991. Mr Jones' new post became vacant after Professor Rigas Doganis left to take up an appointment at the Cranfield Institute of Technology.

The PCL Transport Studies Group was set up in 1971 and offers Masters courses in Transport Management and Planning, both for students from Western Europe and from developing countries. It has an active teaching and research team specializing in public transport, logistics and distribution, air transport and tourism.

PCL says the appointment of Mr Jones will broaden the research base of the group to encompass general urban transport policy issues, methodological and behavioural studies into household travel patterns, and public attitude research.

Stagecoach's new MD at Ribble Buses

Following the appointment of Barry Hinckley as chairman of Stagecoach subsidiary Ribble Buses, John Gould has taken over as managing director of the Preston-based company.

Mr Gould, 41, was formerly operations director and has been with the company since 1990.

He joined the industry as a bus conductor in West Yorkshire in 1975 and, after serving as a driver, entered management as an inspector in 1983 before moving on to a series of managerial positions in Bradford, the West Midlands and Greater Manchester. He is married with two children and lives in East Lancashire.

Ribble Buses currently employs over 850 staff and operates 350 buses out of seven depots throughout Lancashire and Greater Manchester.

The PSV Industry's News Weekly

WEEK

In this first issue of Coach and Bus Week, you'll find all the best of Bus Business and Coachmart. You'll also find a whole lot more, all created to give you better information, and more up-to-date news to help you run your business.

Coach and Bus Week takes over from Bus Business and Coachmart from this week.

Now, every seven days, at no extra cost, you'll receive this bigger, better new magazine for the entire PSV industry.

Coach and Bus Week reflects the changes in this business, but also respects the traditions.

Coach and Bus Week will tell you what's happening, and also give the background to the news.

Coach and Bus Week will show you what industry leaders are thinking – and doing, but won't overlook the smaller operator.

Turn to the back of Coach and Bus Week, and you'll find even more classified ads – now Coach and Bus Week gives you an unrivalled opportunity to buy and sell.

Because it's a weekly, you can get your ads in fast, and pick up a good deal even quicker. Coach and Bus Week is Britain's newest PSV industry newsweekly, but with years of Bus Business and Coachmart experience and excellence behind it.

It's now the essential magazine for everyone connected with buses and coaches.

Don't miss it!

From The Editor-in-Chief

Dear PSV Professional,

Coach and Bus Week represents months of intensive research and planning here at EMAP Response. We know your industry, and we know it's fast-changing. You need the facts first, every week if possible.

And you need the coverage of legal matters, comprehensive details of business opportunities, information about other operators, and much more.

So, in Coach and Bus Week, you'll discover that mix – of latest news and in-depth articles; of firm favourites from Bus Business and Coachmart; and some new arrivals – written by the best PSV journalists around and all designed to give you the business information – and the competitive edge that's vital in this business nowadays.

Coach and Bus Week is the magazine for your business: let us know what you think.

Yours sincerely

Mark Barton
